4 Present address

With the exceptions of the British Antarctic Territory and South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands (which host only officials and research station staff) and the British Indian Ocean Territory (used as a military base), the Territories retain permanent civilian populations. Permanent residency for the 7,000 or so civilians living in the Sovereign Base Areas of Akrotiri and Dhekelia is limited to citizens of the Republic of Cyprus. Collectively, the Territories encompass a population of approximately 260,000 people and a land area of approximately 667,018 square miles (1,727,570 km²). The vast majority of this, 660,000 square miles (1,700,000 km²), constitutes the British Antarctic Territory. Britain participates in the Antarctic Treaty System and, as part of a mutual agreement, the British Antarctic Territory is recognised by four of the other sovereign nations making claims to Antarctic territory.

Please report any change of address
Present nationality: Although the Crown Dependencies of Jersey, Guernsey and the Isle of Man are also under the sovereignty of the British Crown, they are in a different constitutional relationship with the United Kingdom. The British Overseas Territories and Crown Dependencies are themselves distinct from the Commonwealth of Nations, a voluntary association of 54 countries mostly with historic links to the British Empire. The current minister responsible for the Territories is Mark Simmonds MP, of the Foreign Office Gibraltar and the Sovereign Base Areas, however, are the responsibility of the Minister for Europe.

If stateless, explain why the child is believed to be stateless.

Occupation/job: David Lidington MP, while the Falkland Islands are the responsibility of Hugo Swire MP, also of the Foreign Office.

Is the child single, married, legally separated, divorced or widowed?

If married please give:
- full name of husband/wife (before marriage)
- husband’s/wife’s date of birth
- husband’s/wife’s nationality
- husband’s/wife’s address
- husband’s/wife’s place of birth

Early colonies, in the sense of English subjects residing in lands hitherto outside the control of the English government, were generally known as "Plantations". The first, unofficial, colony was Newfoundland, where English fishermen routinely set up seasonal camps in the 16th century.

English colonisation of North America began officially in 1607 with the settlement of Jamestown, the first successful permanent colony in "Virginia" (a term that was then applied generally to North America).

Its off-shoot, Bermuda, was settled inadvertently in 1609, with the Virginia Company’s charter extended to officially include the archipelago in 1612.

If the child is resident in a British overseas territory please give below all addresses in that territory at which he or she has ever lived.

Full address (including name of territory) Date from Date to St. George’s town, founded in Bermuda in that year, remains the oldest continuously inhabited English settlement in the New World [with some historians stating that - its formation predating the 1619 conversion of "James Fort" into "Jamestown" - St. George’s was actually the first successful town the English established in the New World]. Bermuda and Bermudians have played important, sometimes pivotal, but generally underestimated or unacknowledged roles in the shaping of the English and British trans-Atlantic Empires. These include maritime commerce, settlement of the continent and of the West Indies, and the projection of naval power via the colony’s privateers, among other areas. The growth of the British Empire in the 19th century, to its territorial peak in the 1920s, saw Britain acquire over one quarter of the world’s land mass, including territories with large indigenous populations in Asia and Africa. The late nineteenth century and early twentieth centuries saw the larger settler colonies — in Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa — becoming self-governing colonies and achieving independence in all matters except foreign policy, defence and trade. Separate self-governing colonies federated to become Canada (in 1867) and Australia (in 1901). These and other large self-governing colonies had become known as Dominions by the 1920s. The Dominions achieved almost full independence with the Statute of Westminster [1931]. During the second half of the twentieth century most of the British colonies in Africa, Asia and the Caribbean were granted independence. Some colonies became Commonwealth Realms, retaining the British monarch as head of state [citation needed].

Please give details of all absences from that territory during the period of residence above:

Country visited Reason for the visit Date from Date to
After the independence of Belize in Central America Southern Rhodesia [now Zimbabwe] in Africa in 1980 and British Honduras [now in 1981, the last major colony that remained was Hong Kong, with a population of over 5 million [citation needed]. With 1997 approaching, the United Kingdom and China negotiated the Sino-British Joint Declaration, which led to the whole of Hong Kong becoming a “special administrative region” of China in 1997, subject to various conditions intended to guarantee the preservation of Hong Kong’s capitalist economy and its way of life under British rule for at least 50 years after the handover. [citation needed].

Following the return of Hong Kong, the remaining British overseas possessions are mostly small island territories with small populations — the only territories of significant area being the uninhabited British Antarctic Territory and the Falkland Islands. Many of the overseas territories are in North America and the Caribbean, as shown on the map.

In 2002, the British Parliament passed the British Overseas Territories Act 2002. This reclassified the UK’s dependent territories as overseas territories and, with the exception of those people solely connected with the Sovereign Base Areas of Cyprus, restored full British citizenship to their inhabitants.
If the child is resident in a British overseas territory, please give date and place of first arrival.

The head of state in the overseas territories is the British monarch, currently Queen Elizabeth II. The Queen’s role in the territories is in her role as Queen of the United Kingdom, and not in right of each territory.

If this application is granted in which country will the child live?

If the child has been convicted in a court of law of any crime or offence please give details below. If the child has not been convicted, write “NONE” in the left hand columns.

| The Queen appoints a representative in each territory to exercise her executive power. In territories without a permanent representative, the Queen on the advice of the British Government, would appoint the Queen. Except for the States and the overseas territories, the Governor is responsible for appointments to the head of government, unless locally appointed, and is responsible for the governor of the UK government, their political duties and local development. A Governor has the same powers as a Governor of the United Kingdom.
| Governor is appointed by the head of government, usually a retired senior military officer, or a senior administrator. In the case of Saint Helena, Ascension and Tristan da Cunha, the Governor’s representative is in each of the two distant parts of the territory, namely Ascension Island and Tristan da Cunha. The role of the Governor is to act on the advice of the head of government, or for liaising with the UK Government, and carrying out any ceremonial duties. The size and political development of the government appears to be closely correlated to the size and population of the territory. |

Britain and the overseas territories do not have diplomatic representations, although the governments of the overseas territories with indigenous populations all retain a representative office in London. The United Kingdom Overseas Territories Association (UKOTA) also represents the interests of the territories in London. The governments in both London and territories occasionally meet to mitigate or resolve disagreements over the process of governance in the territories and levels of autonomy.

movement across all EU member states. Several nations dispute the UK's sovereignty in the following overseas territories: British Antarctic Territory — Territory overlaps Antarctic claims made by Chile and Argentina; British Indian Ocean Territory — claimed by Mauritius and Seychelles; Falkland Islands — claimed by Argentina; Gibraltar — claimed by Spain; South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands — claimed by Argentina. The many British overseas territories use a varied assortment of currencies, including the British Pound, US dollar, or their own currencies which may be pegged to either. British Antarctic Territory, Tristan da Cunha, South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands — Pound Sterling; The Falkland Islands - Falkland Islands pound (parity with Pound Sterling); Gibraltar - Gibraltar pound (parity with Pound Sterling); Saint Helena and Ascension Island - Saint Helenian pound (parity with Pound Sterling); British Indian Ocean Territory - United States dollar (de facto), Pound sterling (de jure); The British Virgin Islands and The Turks and Caicos Islands - United States dollar; Anguilla and Montserrat - Eastern Caribbean dollar (2.7EC$=1US$); Bermuda - Bermudian dollar (parity with United States dollar); The Cayman Islands - Cayman Islands dollar (1KY$=1.2US$); The Pitcairn Islands - New Zealand dollar; Akrotiri and Dhekelia - Euro. None of the overseas territories has its own nationality status, and all citizens are classed as British Overseas Territories citizens (BOTC). They do however, have legislative independence over immigration, and holding the status of a BOTC does not automatically give a person a right to abode in any of the territories, as it depends on the territory's immigration laws. A territory may issue Belonger status to allow a person classed as a BOTC to reside in the territory that they have close links with. Non-BOTC citizens may acquire Belonger status in order to reside in a particular territory (and may subsequently become naturalised BOTC if they wish). Historically, most inhabitants of the British Empire held the status of British subject, which was usually lost upon independence. From 1949, British subjects in the United Kingdom and the remaining colonies became citizens of the United Kingdom and Colonies. However changes in British immigration and nationality law between 1962 and 1983 saw the creation of a separate British Dependent Territories citizenship (BDTC) with effect from January, 1983. Citizens in most territories were stripped of full British citizenship. This was mainly to prevent a mass exodus of the citizens of Hong Kong to the UK before the agreed handover to China in 1997. Exception was made for the Falkland Islands, which had been invaded in 1982 by Argentina. Full British citizenship was soon returned to the people of Gibraltar due to their friction with Spain. However, the British Overseas Territories Act 2002 replaced British Dependent Territory citizenship with British Overseas Territories citizenship (BOTC), and restored full British citizenship to all BOTCs except those from the Sovereign Base Areas of Cyprus. This restored to BOTCs the right to reside in the UK. British citizens however, do not have an automatic right to reside in any of the Overseas Territories. Some territories prohibit immigration, and any visitors are required to seek the permission of the territory's government to live in the territory. As they are used primarily as military bases, Ascension Island and the British Indian Ocean Territory do not allow visitors to the territory unless on official business. Defence of the Overseas Territories is the responsibility of the UK. Many of the overseas territories are used as military bases by the UK and its allies. Ascension Island (part of Saint Helena, Ascension and Tristan da Cunha) – the Base known as RAF Ascension Island is used by both the Royal Air Force and the United States Air Force. Bermuda became the primary Royal Navy base in the Western Hemisphere, following US independence. The Naval establishment included an admiralty, a dockyard, and a naval squadron. A considerable military garrison was built up to protect it, and Bermuda, which the British Government came to see as a base, rather than as a colony, was known as Fortress Bermuda, and the Gibraltar of the West (Bermudians, like Gibraltarians, also dub their territory ‘The Rock’). Canada and the USA also established bases in Bermuda during the Second World War, which were maintained through the Cold War. Four air bases were located in Bermuda during the Second World War (operated by the Royal Air Force, Royal Navy, US Navy, and US Army/Royal Air Force). Since 1995, the military force in Bermuda has been reduced to the local territorial battalion, the Bermuda Regiment. British Indian Ocean Territory – the island of Diego Garcia is home to a large naval base and airbase leased to the United States by the United Kingdom until 2036 (unless renewed), but that either government can opt out of the agreement in 2016. Falkland Islands – the British Forces Falkland Islands includes commitments from the British Army, Royal Air Force and Royal Navy. Gibraltar – British Forces Gibraltar includes a Royal Navy dockyard (also used by NATO), RAF Gibraltar – used by the RAF and NATO and a local garrison – the Royal Gibraltar Regiment. The Sovereign Base Areas of Akrotiri and Dhekelia in Cyprus – maintained as strategic British military bases in the eastern Mediterranean Sea. Montserrat - the Royal Montserrat Defence Force, historically connected with the Irish Guards, is a body of twenty volunteers, whose duties are primarily ceremonial. Each overseas territory has been granted its own flag and coat of arms by the British monarch. Traditionally, the flags follow the Blue Ensign design, with the Union Flag in the canton, and the territory's coat of arms in the fly. Exceptions to this are Bermuda which uses a Red Ensign; British Antarctic Territory which uses a White Ensign; British Indian Ocean Territory which uses a Blue Ensign with wavy lines to symbolise the sea; and Gibraltar which uses a banner of its coat of arms (the flag of the city of Gibraltar). Akrotiri & Dhekelia is the only British overseas territory without an official flag of its own. The Union Flag is used in this territory and is also used for Ascension Island. As a British Overseas Territory, all apart from Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands and the Cayman Islands do not have a recognised National Olympic Committee (NOC); the British Olympic Association is recognised as the appropriate NOC for such athletes and thus athletes who hold a British passport are eligible to represent Great Britain at the Olympic Games. Shara Proctor from Anguilla, Delano Williams from the Turks and Caicos Islands, Jenaya Wade-Fray from Bermuda and Georgina Cassar from Gibraltar strived to represent Team GB at the London 2012 Olympics. Proctor, Wade-Fray and Cassar qualified for Team GB, with Williams missing the cut, however wishing to represent the UK in 2016. The British Overseas Territories have more biodiversity than the entire UK mainland. There are at least 180 endemic plant species in the overseas territories as opposed to only 12 on the UK mainland. Responsibility for protection of biodiversity and meeting obligations under international environmental conventions is shared between the UK Government and the local governments of the territories. Two areas, Henderson Island in the Pitcairn Islands as well as the Gough and Inaccessible Islands of Tristan Da Cunha are listed as UNESCO World Heritage Sites, and two other territories, the Turks and Caicos Islands, and Saint Helena are on the United Kingdom's tentative list for future UNESCO World Heritage Sites. The three regions of biodiversity hotspots situated in the British Overseas Territories are the Caribbean Islands, the Mediterranean Basin and the Oceania ecozone in the Pacific.
